

Invisible Labor, Visible Needs: Making Family Policy Work for Stay-At-Home (And All) Parents

By Ivana Greco and Elliot Haspel

Depending on state laws, family child care providers can be variously registered, certified, or licensed; this is distinct from unlisted providers, who are not required to, and elect not to, identify themselves to the state. Each state has a threshold number of children above which registration is mandatory, but providers caring for fewer children can still voluntarily list themselves.
